Dining delights this festive season

As sure to put in an appearance this Christmas as pine needles on the floor and tea towels on the heads of five year-old shepherds, are your household's seasonal traditions.

In fact, so dyed-in-the-wool traditional may your Christmas Day have become, that the idea of any change seems practically un-festive. And disrupting the centrepiece of the day by – shudder – going out for Christmas dinner?

Why, just toying with the idea, you may think, is grounds for coal being left in your stocking. But consider it. Why should you again spend hours slaving in a hot kitchen for relatives squabbling over who has been a good boy or girl or not this year?

So, take the stress out of the day and let someone else do the hard work – you know you've earned it. And who knows, maybe you'll be creating a brand new tradition for the family.

There will at least be stacks of room left in a fridge usually bursting with turkey wrapped in kitchen foil – just what you need if you're to chill the luxurious goodies from the posh Christmas hamper that's top of your list.

Of course, there are plenty of restaurants around offering traditional fare with all the trimmings; pud, crackers, the lot. But a bit of imagination will soon find you with a lunchtime feast as far removed from sprouts and stuffing as can be.

After all if you're going to break with tradition, why not make it a clean break?

Chide off the winter chills with the ultimate in personal central heating this Christmas – a spicy curry.
